An artists' collective is celebrating its 40th birthday with 12 new works – one for each month of the anniversary year.

Acme Studios, which was launched in east London in November 1972 as a self-help artists' initiative, has commissioned some of its current artists to create pieces that will be presented on its website, and there'll be a range of events and exhibitions taking place until November next year to mark the celebrations.

One of the group's longest-serving members, painter Roger Kite, is set to unveil his latest exhibition on Saturday, November 17, as part of the festivities.

Focus

Some of the pieces in Pathways date back to 1976, but the show will mainly focus on Roger's work from the past 15 years.

A 48-page colour catalogue will accompany the exhibition, which takes place at the Acme Project Space, in Bonner Road, Haggerston and will run until Sunday, December 16.

Roger said: "I called the exhibition Pathways because my work's gone off in different directions over the 40 years I've been painting. It also refers to the fact that quite often I go walking and that leads to lots of source material being discovered.

Support

"It might seem that my work is quite abstract but it's just been processed through my imagination."

Roger, who joined the Acme team in 1978, will leave the organisation at the end of 2013 to pursue his own work full-time. He works across a range of mediums, including acrylic and oil on canvas and watercolour, pastel and charcoal on paper.

Acme was set up 40 years ago to support artists, and is now one of the country's leading studio development and management organisations. The group now owns proper-

■ Nathan Evans saving the Earth

Imaginings blossom for finale show

A unique amalgamation of cabaret, art and film is to come to east London this month for the grand finale of its national tour.

The snappily titled I Love You But We Only Have Fourteen Minutes To Save The Earth is the product of Nathan Evans' vivid imagination and has been a major success at showings around the country.

It features performances from Nathan and three other artists, each of whom are given the brief to save the world from Armageddon within the tight 14-minute time frame.

Ahead of the performance at Stratford Circus, Nathan said: "After a year of manuring and pruning it's been a pleasure to oversee the original I Love You But... seedlings blossoming and, as we move into autumn, the show continues to branch out to new audiences and bear new artistic fruit.

"I'm looking forward to working with new artists at Stratford Circus to create another new piece to end our tour (if the world doesn't end before)."

The performances are to be held on Friday, November 16, at Stratford Circus.
